TABLE 4.7

Mature Connective Tissues: Bone Tissue

Description	Compact bone tissue consists of osteons (Haversian systems) that contain lamellae, lacunae, osteocytes, canaliculi, and central (Haversian) canals. By contrast, spongy bone tissue (see Figure 6.3a, b) consists of thin columns called trabeculae; spaces between trabeculae are filled with red bone marrow.
Location	Both compact and spongy bone tissue make up the various parts of bones of the body.
Function	Support, protection, storage, houses blood-forming tissue; serves as levers that act with muscle tissue to enable movement.

Liquid Connective Tissue

BLOOD TISSUE Blood tissue (or simply blood) is a connective tissue with a liquid extracellular matrix and formed elements. The extracellular matrix is called blood plasma. The blood plasma is a pale yellow fluid that consists mostly of water with a wide variety of dissolved substances—nutrients, wastes, enzymes, plasma proteins, hormones, respiratory gases, and ions. Suspended in the blood plasma are formed elements—red blood cells (erythrocytes), white blood cells (leukocytes), and platelets (thrombocytes) (Table 4.8). Red blood cells transport oxygen to body cells and remove some carbon dioxide from them. White blood cells are involved in phagocytosis, immunity, and allergic reactions. Platelets (PLAT-lets) participate in blood clotting. The details of blood are considered in Chapter 19.

LYMPH Lymph is the extracellular fluid that flows in lymphatic vessels. It is a connective tissue that consists of several types of cells in a clear liquid extracellular matrix that is similar to blood plasma but with much less protein. The composition of lymph varies from one part of the body to another. For example, lymph leaving lymph nodes includes many lymphocytes, a type of white blood cell, in contrast to lymph from the small intestine, which has a high content of newly absorbed dietary lipids. The details of lymph are considered in Chapter 22.

CHECKPOINT

11. In what ways do connective tissues differ from epithelia?
12. What are the features of the cells, ground substance, and fibers that make up connective tissues?
13. How are connective tissues classified? List the various types.
14. Describe how the structures of the following connective tissues are related to their functions: areolar connective tissue, adipose tissue, reticular connective tissue, dense regular connective tissue, dense irregular connective tissue, elastic connective tissue, hyaline cartilage, fibrocartilage, elastic cartilage, bone tissue, blood tissue, and lymph.
15. What is the difference between interstitial and appositional growth of cartilage?

4.6 MEMBRANES*OBJECTIVES

- Define a membrane.
- Describe the classification of membranes.

Membranes are flat sheets of pliable tissue that cover or line a part of the body. The majority of membranes consist of an epithelial layer and an underlying connective tissue layer and are called epithelial membranes. The principal epithelial membranes of the
